American Politics: Behavior

This course provides an introduction to some of the major themes in political behavior including partisanship and elections, political attitudes and ideology, and the role of the mass media in shaping the public's political beliefs and orientations. This course is also designed to help prepare graduate students in political science to pass the political behavior component of comprehensive examination in the field of American Politics.

Course Requirements:

(1) Prepare for every class by reading and digesting the assigned material. Recommended readings will not be discussed in-depth in class but you will want to read them at some point for exams.

(2) Actively participate in class discussions. In addition, each student will be assigned the task of introducing and briefly critiquing one of the readings each class. In their overview, students should highlight the question, research design, evidence, results, and implications of their reading as well as note any major flaws.

(3) For the writing part of the course you have two options.

Option A: Write three 5 page papers critically reviewing the literature in some specific topic of political behavior. Each paper should consist of:

A. A description of the work that has been published on your topic of choice. This section should be organized to illuminate the differing perspectives in the literature, and (possibly) show how those perspectives have emerged over time.

B. A critical evaluation of the strengths and weakness of the differing perspectives. This section should also address the extent to which the different perspectives are complementary to or in conflict with each other.

C. An evaluation of what sort of future research would be most important to further our understanding of the specific topic you chose.

These three papers are due October 14th, November 4th, and December 4th

Option B: Write a research paper on some aspect of American political behavior. The paper should be a quality product that should ultimately be publishable – although you do not have to complete all parts of the project for this class. The paper should be different from papers you have written for other classes or should show substantial progress from previous work. Please see me to discuss different projects and the exact requirements for the paper

Books you should have:

Anthony Downs, An Economic Theory of Democracy, Harper and Row, 1957, paper.

Angus Campbell, et. al, The American Voter, Chicago, 1976, paper.

Warren Miller and Merrill Shanks, The New American Voter, Harvard, 1996, paper.

Samuel Popkin, The Reasoning Voter, 2nd ed., Chicago, 1994, paper.

Green, Donald P., Bradley Palmquist, Eric Schickler, and Giordano Bruno. Partisan Hearts and Minds: Political Parties and the Social Identity of Voters. (2002)

We will also read major sections from other books. They are almost all classics and you might want to purchase them as well. Look through the syllabus to determine what makes sense for you. In addition, I will place one copy of all books that I have not recommended for purchase and any articles that are not on JSTOR in the grad lounge.
